Kamakura Daibutsu

<https://www.kotoku-in.jp/en/>

The statue commonly known as Kamakura Daibutsu (Great Buddha of Kamakura), a colossal copper image of Amida-butsu (Amitabha Buddha), is the principle image of Kotoku-in. The fact that it sits in the open air makes it unusual amongst large Buddha statues in Japan. The Great Buddha, designated a National Treasure by the Japanese government, is some 11.3 meters tall and weighs around 121 tons. Though in size it falls short of the Great Buddha of Todai-ji Temple at Nara (an image of Rushana-butsu [Vairochana Buddha]), it essentially retains its original form; as such it is an invaluable example of Japanese historical Buddhist art. According to the Azumakagami, a chronicle describing the achievements of the Kamakura Shogunate from the late 12th century through the mid-13th century, construction of the Great Buddha began in 1252. It is also believed that the priest Joku gathered donations from the people to build it. However, much remains unclear about the specifics of the Great Buddha's construction, and the artist has yet to be identified. When it was first built, the Great Buddha was enshrined in Daibutsu-den Hall, but ancient records (Taiheiki and Kamakura-dainikki) tell us that this building was damaged and ultimately destroyed in typhoons hitting in 1334 and 1369, and subsequently in a severe earthquake in 1498. Since then, because it sits out in the open, the statue itself has been ravaged by the elements. During the mid Edo period (1603?1867), Jodo Sect priests Yuten* and Yokoku endeavored to repair the Great Buddha with funds provided by Nojima Shinzaemon, a merchant of the Asakusa district.

Tsukiji Outer Market

<https://www.tsukiji.or.jp/english/>

Tsukiji Outer Market is Japan's "Food Town," where one can encounter all kinds of traditional Japanese foods. A mixture of wholesale and retail shops, along with numerous restaurants, line the streets, and new culinary trends are born here. Originally Tsukiji Market catered primarily to professionals. That is why items sold there were generally too large for a small family to buy. However, some of the wholesale shops in the market have started retailing high-end merchandise to retail customers and visitors. For example, ready-to-eat sushi meals are now sold in smaller sizes. Even a bite-sized egg roll can be had for those who just want to try it. The following explains how the market has become so well-known and the trends that have shaped how it looks today.

Tokyo Skytree

<https://www.tokyo-skytree.jp/en/>

The major role of TOKYO SKYTREE is transmission of digital terrestrial broadcasting. Digital terrestrial broadcasting has already been in use since December 2003 in the Kanto area, but due to the many tall buildings rising over 200m high in central Tokyo, it has become necessary to build a new tower higher than 600m for broadcasting transmission purposes.

When the role is totally transferred to the new tower in the 600m class, the volume of digital terrestrial broadcasting transmission will be doubled, and thus mitigate the impact of the ever-increasing number of high-rise buildings. It is also expected to widen the area of coverage for "One Seg" digital terrestrial broadcasting for mobile phones, which has been in operation since April 2006.

Naritasan Shinshoji Temple

<https://www.naritasan.or.jp/english/>

Naritasan Shinsho-ji Temple is a Buddhist temple located in Narita, Chiba Prefecture. The temple deity is Fudo Myo-o and has long been known as "Narita Fudo". This place is major center of Fudosen belief. About 3 million people visit the temple from January 1st to January 3rd for the first prayer worship of the year. It is also known that sumo wrestlers and popular actors scatter beans during the Setsubun Festival in February at this temple. The temple is closely related to the famous Kabuki Ichikawa family.

This well-known Kabuki family, the name of "Naritaya" Ichikawa Danjuro is originated in Naritasan. Since opening, we have been carrying out a continuous Ogoma prayer.
